Incidents of the Struggle Teeming With Human Interest.

ALL DUE TO PETTY QUARREL

If Los Angeles Union Operators Had Not Disputed With Woman In Oakland, Peace Might Have Reigned. Strikers' Touching Devotion.

Probably in no other line of human endeavor is there a more picturesque and varied assortment of men than in the ranks of the telegraph operators. It is not surprising, then, that a general strike of the guild throughout the United States should be productive of incidents teeming with human interest, says a Chicago special dispatch to the

New York Herald. Men who had grown old in the service of the Western Union or had graduated from the office boy or check boy staff to the key in the Postal reluctantly obeyed the signal and walked out with the younger "boys"-reluctantly, for when a man has worked thirty-five years for one concern and is in a fair way to be pensioned off in his old age it takes something of a tug to break the tie. So it was with David Duey, chief operator of the Chicago office of the Associated Press and for twenty-five years an employe of the office. When the "Good night, RS," signal had been given Monday evening, Aug. 12, at 7:30 o'clock by the operators in reply to General Manager Stone's request that he be allowed to put up their plea to the directors in September, Duey continued to sit idly at his desk. Two hours later, as business was resuming, Duey approached his chief. "They are my boys," Duey said, "and they've quit. I don't belong to the union. I am not an advocate of most of their theories, but-the boys have gone out, and I suppose I'd better quit." And, despite the entreaties of his comrades and the offcials of the office, the aged wire chief announced his resignation.

"Why couldn't the fellows tell Duey he wasn't expected to quit?" exclaimed one employee, almost brokenly. "Why, Duey taught them telegraphy and made them what they are."

Mrs. Mary Hansen, the first woman operator in the country and now seventy-five years old, according to those well posted, refused to desert her key in the main office of the Western 1906-By ukase of the czar, 4,500,000 acres Union. For two generations with her nimble fingers she has transmitted messages, and a strike seems to her the utmost folly. With Mrs. Hansen remained Jere Meremess, Tom Babb, Sam Ingram and G. M. Reynolds, all of whom turned deaf ears to the whistle which summoned their colleagues to rebellion. All are over sixty.

Tom Babb, who has been in the same office for thirty-seven years, was one of those who stuck by the company in the famous strike of 1883, and with him Ingram, sixty-five years old, and Reynolds, seventy-two, stuck also. Babb long, long ago was regarded as the speediest and most accurate telegrapher in the country, and at the height of his career he occupied the post of chief operator. He has almost lost the use of his arms through "operators' cramp," a form of paralysis common among the men of the

Frank Crittenden, old and bent and for forty years an operator, went out with the strikers. Twoscore of his years have been spent in the service of the Western Union. He stuck by the company when others deserted their keys in 1870. Again in 1883 he stayed by the company as manager of the Denver office, and it was the only office that did not go out. This time, although he has a large family to support, although he is old and bent, his eyes dim and his hand must grasp the key very firmly to transmit the dots and dashes, he went out with the "boys."

Crittenden was once receiving $120 a month, but when he went out he was receiving $85, although a division chief. He wanted more money and thought he should have it, so he went with the other "boys." If they win he will receive $97.75 a month; if they lose he probably cannot work anywhere, and there is nothing save telegraphy to which he can turn his hand. But Crittenden has company, for J. J. Newkirk, sixty-six years old and an operator forty-six years, also struck. Ramifications of the strike have been far reaching. There is scarcely a branch of commerce that has not been affected, and apparently all because of a quarrel over the wire between the union operator in the Los Angeles office with the woman operator in the Oakland (Cal.) office. If that petty wire quarrel had not developed, the chances are there would have been no refusal in Chicago to handle nonunion business from Los Angeles, nor would there have been any occasion for the resolution passed by the Chicago union's officers which per-erators would not have gone out, and When the Associated Press operators went out Monday evening, Aug. 12, they left the "stories" they were taking abruptly. The time was written as usual, but at the end of their suddenly terminated stories they either put a dash and the word "Strike" or "More" or ended with absolutely no indication of the reason apparent to

"I must get this through. Please give me the next chance," begged a woman with a baby in her arms. "Our little boy is dying at the hotel, and I must reach my husband. The telegraph company cannot send the message through."

The woman said her name was Mrs. broker in the Frick building. Pittsburg. She was directed to the headquarters of the long distance company.

A stanch union man in Chicago had discussed things with his fellows, made speeches and furnished many thoughts that stand in good stead now, says the Chicago Inter Ocean. He loved principle and hated weak kneed apparent ease. men. His brothers admired and respected him.

The other night they saw him slipping stealthily up the alley from Clark street and go into the back door of the Western Union building. They called, and he stopped. "What are you doing here, Art?" they demanded.

He looked from one face to another, like one who had been found out in a crime. And then he spoke slowly, heavily and without hope.

"Boys," he said, "boys, I couldn't sit there and let my mother die. She would not let me die. She has gone out and slaved for me, so that I could learn the trade, and now she is old and gone to pieces. You're right, all of you, and I'm wrong, dead wrong, but I could not stand it to sit there and think. I'm going back to work." Out in Clark street a car rattled and clanged. An automobile buzzed past on the boulevard on the other side of the building. There was the monotony of the city to break the silence now and then the shrill cry of a newsboy calling out strike extras. But where they stood was a vacant silence. Then one of the group spoke. Like one in the presence of tragedy he spoke, slowly and with kindness. "Art, you're right. Go to work, but wait until we get away. We-we won't know anything about it." He watched them pass out into Lasalle street. And then he turned away from the door, slunk down the alley and disappeared into the crowd of people that flowed down Clark street.

"The women and girls are the backbone of this strike," Cal E. Ryle, chairman of the strikers' grievance commit tee of the telegraphers in Kansas City, said the other morning to a reporter of the Kansas City Star. "Their enthusiasm is contagious and serves to strengthen us in our determination to

"Yes and some of them have more at stake than the men," another striker said.

He pointed out two young women who were industriously expounding their grievances to a group of women. "See those two girls," he said. "They bought a home about a year ago for themselves and their widowed mother out near Budd Park. They have it about one-third paid for. Now, if we lose this strike and consequently those girls lose their jobs they stand to lose their home, too, for telegraphy is the only trade they know." The women and girls attend every meeting of the strikers and are prominent in the deliberations. "Feel like going back to work, Carrie?" inquired an operator, addressing one of the women in a joking way. "No, sir-ee," she replied. "I'm a regular dynamiter on this strike question. I'll get a job at a ribbon counter before I'll go back under the old condi-

LARGE SAVER OF MONEY.

Only Necessary to Keep Flame From Touching the Boiler, Professor L. P. Breckenridge Declares-Smoke Nuisance Solved at Big Heating Plant of Illinois University.

The smoke nuisance, with its loss of millions of dollars annually to the big and little cities of the United States, with its injury to public health, to vegetation and civic beauty, is an entirely unnecessary evil and should not be tolerated for a single day, according to L. P. Breckenridge, director of the engineering experiment station of the University of Illinois and engineer in charge of the steam engineering division of the United States geological society, says the Washington Post.

Professor Breckenridge, who is one of the most widely known mechanical engineers of the United States, is now in Washington conferring with the experts of the geological survey on the problem of fuel testing. He has not only solved the smoke nuisance at the big heating plant of the University of Illinois, but at one boiler he has made it practically impossible to "make"

For two years the heating plant of the university, with a horsepower of 2,000, has been operated without smoke and at an actual saving of $5,000 a year over carelessly operated commercial plants. This ideal condition can be duplicated in any plant in the United States, according to Professor

"In our experiments on one of the boilers at the university heating plant," said Professor Breckenridge, "we changed the conditions of operation and did all sorts of things that might occur in an ordinary plant, and I should say that for a whole week we never made any great amount of smoke and that day after day we absolutely did not make any smoke at We tried our best to make smoke,

"In our heating plant we burn 15,000 that we are now using as cheap an Illinois coal as we can find. With this proper burning of coal we have obtainis from 10 to 15 per cent more than means increase of efficiency. In this increased efficiency we have a saving

"Illinois manufacturers visit our plant frequently, and in many instances they have carried away with them the lessons it teaches. The Edison plant in Chicago, with 100,000 horsepower, is practically smokeless and is an excellent object lesson to the owners of other large concerns.

"Burning coal smokelessly is not a question of patended furnaces or boilers-in fact, very little depends upon the type of boiler. The essential thing is to have the boiler so placed that the flame from the coal does not touch it. The flame striking the boiler prevents proper and complete combustion and results in the making of smoke. Light smoke. Place a saucer in the flame and there will be plenty of smoke. So it is with the fire under the boiler. Keep the flame from touching the boil-

Old Main 4694 er and you have smokeless conditions. "Of course different kinds of coal give different lengths of flame, depending upon the amount of volatile matter in the coal. This means that the distance between the boiler and the grate must vary to suit the coal used. But in spite of the varying length of flame from these coals I am of the opinion that six different types of furnace will be sufficient to burn without smoke any coal in the United States. "We are able to tell the amount of volatile matter in coal by chemical analysis, which means that if a manufacturer learns the chemical analysis of his coal he will know the length of flame and can adjust his furnace accordingly. Hundreds of chemical analyses of coal have been made by the technologic branch of the geologic survey, and we intend to keep this work going until we know every coal in the United States. After that there will be little excuse for making smoke. "Smokeless conditions cannot come, however, so long as there is hand firing. Mechanical stokers must do the work if there is to be perfect combustion, and the coal should be of nearly burn without smoke as a rule."

Deep Sea Lobsters. A Maine fisherman, believing that there are just as many lobsters as ever, set his pots away out on Cash's banks, in the path of ocean steamships, and when he hauled them found 2,500 splendid specimens, none less than ten inches and most of them nearer fifteen and twenty, says the Kennebec (Me.) Journal. It is his theory that various causes may have driven the crustaceans away from the shore, but that there are still plenty of them if one can ascertain their whereabouts. His views will undoubtedly prompt other

THE INTERNATIONAL SERIES.

Text of the Lesson, Num. x, 11-13, 29-36-Memory Verses, 35, 36-Golden Text, Ex. xiii, 21-Commentary Prepared by Rev. D. M. Stearns.

A little over a year and a month has passed since Israel left the bondage of Egypt (suggestive of the bondage of the world lying in the wicked one), to find that they carried a tyrant within them, the self that would not be subdued and that caused them so much trouble by its perverse and persistent murmuring, yet the Lord who re deemed them and loved them, knowing all about them, arranged to dwell in their midst and be their God and provided a way whereby they could always approach Him and learn His will in all things.

While Exodus is the redemption book and Leviticus the book of worship, Numbers is the book of journey ings. It also tells of the numbering of the people at Sinai in the beginning of the second year after leaving Egypt and of their numbering a second time, thirty-eight years later, in the plains of Moab, by Jordan, near Jericho (chapters i and xxvi), and this significant statement concerning the second numbering. Among these there was not a man of them whom Moses and Aaron the priest, numbered when they numbered the children of Israel in the wilderness of Sinai * * * save Caleb, the son of Jephunneh, and Joshua, the son of Nun" (xxvi, 64, 65). These numberings did not include the tribe of Levi (1, 47, 49). The book of Numbers illustrates the life of the believer in the wilderness of this world, and Canaan suggests the rest into which we should enter after we are redeemed, and we know that but few of the redeemed seem to enter into rest (Heb. iii, 15, to iv, 10)). In the first month of the second year they kept the Passover at the appointed season (ix, 1-5), for we must never forget that we are redeemed by the blood of the Lamb and separated from the world unto God to be His own possession.

In the second year, on the twentieth day of the second month, everything being in readiness, they start from Sinai on their journeyings under the immediate care and guidance of the Lord who redeemed them and who never forsook them notwithstanding all their rebellion (verses 11-13). The presence of the Lord in the pillar of cloud by day and fire by night was everything to them, their perfect oracle and gulde, protector and avenger. Note in chapter ix, 15-23, the sevenfold "at the commandment of the Lord" concerning all their movements, for the one thing required of the believer is a whole hearted, willing obedience (Isa. 1, 19). The silver trumpets of chapter x, 1-10, for the assembling of the peo ple, etc., have also a reminder of atonement (Ex. xxx, 16) and seem to be ever saying, "I have redeemed thee; I have called thee by name; thou art mine (Isa. xliii, 1).

In verses 14 to 28 of our lesson chapter we have the order of march of the tribes, for God is a God of order and arrangement and peace, never of confusion or unquietness (I Cor. xiv, 33-40). First came the camp of Judah, including Isachar and Zebulun; then, under the care of Gershon and Merari of the tribe of Levi, all the heavier parts of the tabernacle on six covered wagons, drawn by twelve oxen (chapter vii, 6-8); then the camp of Reuben, including Simeon and Gad, followed by the Kohathites bearing the holy ves sels on their shoulders; then the other two camps of Ephraim and Dan, including the six remaining tribes. Every tribe knew its place and every man of Levi his work, and to be happy each one had only to accept his place and work and keep it and do it. A lot of restless Christians seem to think that God does not know the best place for His people nor the work He can best accomplish through them, and so they are ever complaining. Perfect confidence in the loving management of our Redeemer would be so much better and save us from a lot of fretfulness. We read in Ex. xviii that Moses' father-in-law came to visit him, bringing Moses' wife and two sons, but the last verse of the chapter said that he departed and went his way into his own land. Verses 29, 30, of our lesson may refer to an incident of that visit, which he may have prolonged for several months, or else this is the record of another visit, but that is not so important a matter as the words of Moses in this connection. "We are journeying unto the place of which the Lord said, I will give it you." Are we so resting with the quiet assurance on the faithfulness of God and His preclous promises that we are ready to say: "The Lord hath spoken good concerning us. Come thou with us, and we will do thee good." Do such words as John 1, 12; x, 28, 29; Rev. iii, 21; v, 9, 10; Col. iii, 4, so fill us that we cannot help saying to others, Come with us and share this redemption and kingdom and glory? Or, as far as others can judge of us, does it all seem to be nothing to us, not worth mentioning?

Verse 31 seems weak and unbelieving on the part of Moses, for was not the presence of God in the cloud all they needed? The knowledge of mortals as to how to encamp, etc., was wholly crowded out by the presence and omniscience of God. But it is such a picture of ourselves. With such assurances as Ps. xxxii, 8; Isa. xxx, 21, we are so apt to lean upon human help and guidance and say flattering words.
